

I am very disappointed that the FCC would even consider overturning the NJ DO Not Call Law. The law works. It protects people from telemarketers much better than the national law. If anything the FCC should consider implementing the New Jersey statute on a national level. The benefit of the many (the people who do not have to deal with telemarketers) is vastly more important than the benefit of the few (the telemarketers).

Peter White